The “Steelyard”

★ 2024 15th Golden Comic Awards Grand Prize for Comic of the Year

Rights Contact: chhenghong1987@gmail.com

“How do you measure happiness when the world is drowning in injustice?”

Introduction

Comic artist RUAN Guang-Min reinterprets the short story “The Steelyard” by Lai Ho in the medium of comics. Lai Ho, a writer and poet during the period of Japanese rule over Taiwan, is widely regarded as the “Father of Modern Taiwanese literature”. The plot focuses on the greengrocer Qin and his family, who are trying to find their own little piece of happiness in the midst of troubled times and the oppression of the colonial power. RUAN Guang-Min masterfully captures the events of the short story with pen and paper to adapt the original work. He breathes new life into the story with his artistic skill to deliver a completely new reading experience.

“Home is not a place,
but people you love or who love you.”

Introduction

After a strange explosion of light, the dogs and cats of the entire city are suddenly bigger than all humans and able to talk. The stray Jima brings bad news to the big cat clan. No one knows whether the comparatively safe living conditions they have established with great effort can continue to exist after a stone bridge appears on the sea, providing a link to the city of humans. But while the cats discuss how to deal with the situation, a new danger quietly creeps up on them...

“For everyone who wants more sex but longs for love.”

Introduction

Nine stories about physical and sexual relationships outside the social norm paint a modern picture of contemporary Taiwan, which is marked by countless challenges and opportunities for sex, love and questions of sexual identity. Following her previous work “Blowing-up Adventure of me!”, comic artist Huihui teams up with renowned screenwriter Li-Ying Chien to adapt the story, which is difficult to realize on a stage due to the numerous sex scenes and depiction of different body types, into the comic book medium.

“The taste of Taiwanese cuisine on your lips,
with the story in your heart...”

Introduction

“The signature dish” is the kind of meal that warms everyone's heart. Chef Qingxiong, who has lost a competition in France, teams up with the master Awang, who travels around the island in a street food cart in his search of a true dish of the heart. Together they set off on a journey to explore Taiwan's food culture. Minced meat with pickled cucumber, fried rice noodles, spring rolls, pork trotter rice... distinctive signature dishes to street food cuisine and the flavors everyone craves the most. It may not be the highest art of cooking, but the sudden craving for such a dish is often accompanied by nostalgic memories. Author CHENG Hsin-Mei and illustrator Aniyong, who won the Golden Comic Awards & Connection+ Award for Best New Talent of the Year, immerse the reader in a light-hearted and exciting story in which the adventures of the two chefs on the island are recounted whilst the touching background of each dish is revealed.
